SYNOPSIS

The training, Harm Reduction Myth-busters: What can law enforcement learn from working with harm reduction? was developed specifically for law enforcement to gain a better understanding of harm reduction services. This training will provide an overview of harm reduction, how stigma contributes to problematic substance use, an overview of substance use disorder, and how law enforcement and harm reduction can work together. By the end of the training, participants will:

- Have a basic understanding of harm reduction
- Know what harm reduction looks like throughout Oregon
- Be able to identify supplies distributed by harm reduction
- Have a basic understanding of treatment options
- Be able to dispel myths about harm reduction

In addition, participants in the training will be given the opportunity to address concerns they may have about harm reduction and discuss options for referrals to other services.

The Overdose Response Strategy is a collaboration between HIDTA and the CDC Foundation to bring together public health and public safety to reduce fatal and non-fatal overdose. The Oregon team is comprised of a Drug Intelligence Officer, Tiffany Hicks, and a Public Health Analyst Erin Porter.
